To Whom it May Concern,

The Colorado Roadless Areas ensure that some pristine public lands stay that way for future generations. The impact of industry on the environment is already very evident. Cities like Flint Michigan have devastatingly polluted water that has poisoned its population. There are incidences in Colorado of environmental impacts of mining and fracking outside of Colorado Springs that have had adverse effects on the population.

When do we see the protection of our resources such as water and air as more valuable than short term profits for dirty industries. Please continue to be good stewards of our beautiful state and keep the roadless rules as they are.

Thank you,
Ken Bernstein
