Withdraw Plan to Allow Coal Mining in Protected Roadless Areas RE: Rulemaking for Colorado Roadless Areas - Supplemental #46470

Re: Withdraw Plan to Allow Coal Mining in Protected Roadless Areas RE: Rulemaking for Colorado Roadless Areas - Supplemental #46470

Dear U.S. Forest Service - Ken Tu,

Dear U.S. Forest Service, I think you should allow Arch Coal to mine coal in the National Forest under the following conditions : 1. All roads shall be removed and replanted after the mine closes. 2. There shall be no fugitive water, dust, coal or chemicals from their lease boundary. Any violation would trigger payment of the bond. 3. They must first successfully plant the number of trees they cut plus 50%. And they must plant trees with carbon uptake equivalent to the carbon emitted from their product and process plus 30% 4. Before a shovel of dirt is moved, they must post an irrevocable bond in the amount of $2.5 billion dollars, half of which would go to the local community when they do go bankrupt. If these conditions aren't met, their intentions can most likely be considered to be harmful to the roadless areas, Colorado, the neighboring communities and countless flora and fauna. Sincerely, A Professional Engineer

Sincerely,

Robert Harvey
