Any road that is shown on a USGS topographical map dated from 1976 or before can not be closed as it is considered as a public thoroughfare. As such it can not be closed without a full environmental impact study being done. A simple impact statement is not allowed in these cases. Many times the USFS will try to get away with only using a statement to close roads off because they only cost in the neighborhood of $50 to complete. A full EIS runs about a half million dollars. Regardless of budget cuts, the law is the law and none of these agencies are above them. These lands belong to the American public, not the governmental agencies that we the people charged with their care. It's time for the people to hold these agencies accountable for their actions and require them to uphold the laws of the land.
