Rico West Dolores Roads and Trails Project

Places that honor nature are becoming harder to find. The US (the world!) is becoming more populated. The need to get away, vacation, be outdoors is always a top priority for families. But, these days there are simply more of us. The places that remain stashed away, tough to get to, deeply dominated by natural ecosystems-- these we need to treasure and honor.

We do that by limiting access to them. Not only the sheer numbers of people who might visit, but the means by which they visit. "No motorized anything" ought to be a mantra for some places. This is one of them.

Thank you.
