Comments:

I urge that the roadless rule for Alaska's national forest be maintained without change, or strengthened. Roadless areas have been established to protect our national heritage, to allow wildlife and flora to have habitats and to flourish there. They also protect the land and water from damage from erosion.

I am concerned about all flora and fauna that use these areas, but there are some animals that cannot live at all except in roadless areas. There are some birds that will not build a nest within miles of a road.

Roadless areas are a precious national resource. Please keep Alaska's roadless areas safe.
