I write to ask that the Roadless Rule be continued for the protection of the old-growth forest in Southeast Alaska. This rule protects 9.3 million acres of roadless rainforest in the Tongass.

Should the law be dismantled, it would endanger much of the old-growth temperate rainforest left on Earth. Further, it would destroy the only habitat of the endangered Alexander Archipelago wolf.

Studies repeatedly shown that once roads are built, poachers and hunters use them - endangering wildlife and trees. This land is irreplaceable. Please keep the Roadless Rule intact.
