Keep the Tongass wild. That is why local Alaskan people love this place so much. Sometimes it can be an inconvenience, but most of us have grown up in these wild spaces or have moved to these areas because we enjoy how natural and "un-touched" they are. The role of the Forest Service is to protect resources for future generations, and the Tongass not only has timber, fisheries, big game, and tourism resources, but we also are one of the places left that can still enjoy the inherent value of wilderness. Keep it that way.
