Dear comment readers,

I am a hang glider and paraglider pilot. It is becoming increasingly difficult to fly in the U.S. due to losing launch and landing sites. King Mountain is a world class hang gliding/paragliding site and deserves preservation.

I'm all for wilderness, but I believe we have enough land that is 'untrammled by man' and only caters to the few. I am in support of a wilderness-like experience in the area, and would prefer to see a multi-use plan.

Hang gliding and paragliding are non-motorized/mechaical and extremely low impact on the resource (far more than horses which rut the trails when wet and leave feces for hikers to avoid)

It is already easy to get lost or feel lost in Idaho....which is the essence of the wilderness experience. It is also a wilderness experience to soar high above the peaks and to lose that access would be a real shame.

Please keep Idaho untrammled by the government.
