Comments:

I have wrapped 9 vacations around flying my hang glider from King Mountain over the last 15 years. The Lost River range is spectacular country and I have loved spending time (and money) in the area. My only vacations to Idaho have been based on having access to fly from King Mountain. Some of the flights have taken me from King Mountain up the Lost River Range, across to the Lemhi range and on over the Bitterroot Mountains into Montana. It would be a shame to lose our access to one of the premier hang gliding sites in the world. Having large portions of the wild and mostly inaccessible areas in this part of Idaho designated as wilderness would keep these areas as pristine as they currently are. However, prohibiting access to the small area we need for the hang gliding launch on the slope of King Mountain will stop a substantial group of out of state pilots from planning Idaho vacations that we have been making for many years. I hope you take the hang gliding community's interests in mind when establishing the restrictions to be imposed with this new area.

Thank You
