I'm writing to express my support of the King Mountain flying site, which is at risk of closing due to your proposed plan to make this a wilderness area. This flying site is one of the most epic locations in the Western US, and provides incredible conditions and terrain for free flight. The impact of the site to the surrounding wilderness is minimal, and seems completely unnecessary to deprive pilots from around the world of the opportunity to practice one of the most spectacular sports out there. Hang glider and paraglider pilots, as a group, tend to be conscientious environmentalists and good stewards of the wilderness. What can we do to partner with the Forest Service to preserve our flying site?
