The Salmon-Challis National Forest includes some of the wildest, roadless areas left in Idaho. These areas are deserving of Wilderness Designation. Borah Peak, North Slope Pioneer Mountains, and the entire Lost River Range should be kept in the wilderness plan.

I've seen these peaks from a distance and marveled at their wild character. Even though I may never have the opportunity to explore them, knowing that these wild spaces are protected helps satisfy the need for just knowing that some of our true wilderness stays wild. Undeveloped, untrammelled by man - these are the keys to wilderness and these spaces deserve that level of protection.
