Comments:

I am against any new wilderness areas. There is already a disproportionate amount of wilderness in central Idaho. A wilderness designation excludes at least 98% of the population from enjoying the designated public lands. You either have to be on horseback, or be a ironman type of athlete, or only enjoy the periphery. OR be a member of an affluent elite group that owns an inholding in the wilderness area or flies in to an inholding to enjoy the area--to the exclusion of the majority of the majority of the populace. A better plan for management would be sustainable recreation. Don't shut out the majority of people via wilderness designation. Wilderness designation only provides insignificant and incremental environmental benefits relative to other ways of managing, but limits enjoyment of public lands to a small, elite group.
