Comments:

Dear Forest Service,

I am completely opposed to harvesting of old growth forest. There is plenty of previously harvested forests that are able to supply building needs and metal structures are capable of meeting those same needs. There are obviously no more old growth forests and which provide the best habitat for specific species and a beauty that is not present in other previously harvested forests. I understand that there are those who wish to have an income from employment harvesting those trees however they can make a living doing other things, like I have learned to do. The greedy owners of those companies don't need that extra wealth. Those logs are probably just going to be exported so mills will not benefit anyway. Those trees are not just to provide money to a few but to be available to be enjoyed by all of us, even if because I am only able to see their pictures and know others can enjoy their beauty.

Sincerely,

John Torrey
