Comments:

I oppose the massive sale of timber from Tongass National Forest. Environmentalists have argued that large-scale logging and road-building would damage wildlife habitat, impact sport and subsistence hunters and recreational use of the forests.

The proposed sale has earned the attention of organizations throughout the country.

"Tongass National Forest is the crown jewel of our nation's forest system and it's no place for logging," Harvey, Alaska representative for Sierra Club's Our Wild America campaign, said in the release. "An accurate environmental review would have made it clear that this sale would be a threat to Alaska's extraordinary environment and our tourism and recreation economy and should never take place."
