Comments:

Llamas are the least invasive pack animals known to man. They pose no harm or threat to those they encounter or the environment they pass through. To deny people the experience of packing with these animals could be considered infringing on basic freedoms we are promised as americans. Not only are these animals amazing creatures to interact with but they provide so much education and enrichment for all who they encounter and to deny people of this experience would be cruel and a true injustice to the future generations. Please reconsider what you are doing.
