Building roads for any reason through this pristine wilderness would be a desecration. At age 65, I may never live to see the natural beauty of the Alaskan wilderness, but its purity holds a special place in my heart. We humans are destroying our own planet, our home, and the only one we've got. At this late hour, is it truly necessary to continue the destruction? We can no longer hide behind denial. If you decide to build these roads, you are knowingly harming an already suffering environment.
