Comments:

I live in Montana. I hunt, fish and generally enjoy the outdoors multiple times each week. Every patch of roadless area I am in holds a rich, diverse population of animals and plant life...much more so than areas with road access.

Areas with road access are polluted with trash and signs of obvious misuse. Animals are scarce and the energy of the land holds the feel and look of being "used". No longer pristine, cherished or respected. Broken not whole.

If we continue to open more and more areas to include roads and subject these areas to human use/misuse, overtime the value of these areas will be reduced and the diversity of value generated will depreciate substantially.

Keep the Tongass roadless.
