Comments:

Healthy salmon runs are an increasingly rare commodity on this planet. Roads, buildings and urban development, on the other hand, are all over the place. We need to keep our corner of the world wild and roadless - our salmon, forests and rural communities depend on it. More specifically, my family run small business depends on it. We catch, process and direct market wild salmon, halibut, black cod and rockfish caught in Southeast Alaska. We send our fish to customers all over the country. If healthy salmon habitat is maintained via upholding the Roadless Rule, my family will be able to continue running our business sustainably into the future. No action on the Roadless Rule is the best action.
