2001 Roadless Rule

As the parent of two twenty somethings and an avid hiker, biker and nature lover, I am opposed to altering the 2001 roadless rule in any way. I suggest before you consider changing protections that have been placed upon American soil that you research the irreparable damage it would cause to future generations.

I have worked since the age of 16. I was doing quite well until my divorce in 2005 followed by the collapse of the housing market. There isn't enough time left for me on this planet to recoup what wealth I lost but it doesn't cost anything to spend a day walking in the woods or kayaking in a river.

This too you want to take away from me and future generations.

You should all be ashamed.

Sincerely,

Linda Robinson
