Why does the USFS feel the mtns need to be managed in this way

We know the results of cutting rds in steep terrain only destroys our streams below and no you cannot manage the runoff for if you could our streams would not be as they are today

We have seen what Mtn logging does to our streams and roads

We know the prices in timber are at an all time low and having to go for pulp to burn

You will never make enough money on timber to offset the destruction it causes to the mtns

What is so bad about leaving them alone and let nature take its course like it has for hundreds of years

Then all you have to do is just try to maintain what we have already cut thru them so the future generations can enjoy what is left

It is much better than looking at a clear cut

Writing this is as much of a waste of time as speaking the words but at least I can say I tried

I am just under the belief of( If It Ain't Broken Then Don't Try To Fix It)
