I support prescribed burning as burning is a natural way for forests to stay healthy. However, constructing 360 miles of fire breaks as well as "temporary" roads is very destructive. Please find alternate solutions such as larger burn tracts.

Potentially 60,000 acres of commercial logging? This number is way too high. The forest may benefit from some selective logging, but this is way too much logging!!!

Herbicide application in the national forest, especially on up to 74,500 acres, will destroy the biodiversity of the forest; not make it healthier. Having lost a loved one to a type of cancer that survivors have law suits against Roundup; I don't understand why anyone would want to use this option especially on such a large scale.
