Dear Sir or Madam,

I appreciate the opportunity to offer my thoughts on the Great American Outdoors Act.

It sounds great that these funds will be spent on trail improvement as well as habitat improvement, which I assume means reducing invasive species. These all sound like very worthy and commendable projects and I wish you success with this.

However, spending precious money on logging road improvement, maintenance or repairs isn't wise and would be to the detriment of the forests that you are supposed to be protecting. Improved logging roads will allow more logging of the forest with easier accessibility. This should not be done, especially when our forests need protection from the ravages of clear cut or shelterwood logging, which are destroying our precious forests.

It also seems like a waste of money to commission further studies when those funds would show immediate results by funding forest habitat improvement.

Respectfully,
